“You can see on the pictures my observations of the complex relationship between man and nature in a precious ecosystem.

It’s the industrial landscape of the Zhytomyr region in Ukraine and the erosion of rusting surfaces on the sea coast of my native city taken in the off-season. This series is an investigation of the eternal confrontation between man and nature. Man destroys nature by extracting minerals, and nature corrodes man-made structures.

Any fragment of beauty can become a moment that brings us back to one simple and sensible thing-to life in peace and harmony.

We are all waiting for the victory of my country.”

-Olga Volianska

Award winning Ukrainian born and based photographer Olga Volianska has two art educations; fashion design and design of the architectural environment.

In 2017 she discovered a new passion - photography. In the beginning it was photography from travels. She participated in numerous workshops and photo trips around the world, from Nepal to Paris along side outstanding masters of photography, including a portfolio review with Gueorgui Pinkhassov.

In 2020, during the Pandemic, photography took on a new meaning for Olga and became another tool for her artistic expression. After graduating from the Kyiv School of Photography, having passed all the programs of Dimitri Bogachuk, Olga became seriously interested in fine art photography, the results of which are presented in this exhibition.

As the Pandemic continued and along with Russian aggression, a new reality forced Olga to start to shoot at home and work with personal archives.

The Cardinal Gallery is thrilled to bring those archives to light in Volianska's North American premiere exhibition.

Olga currently lives in Odessa, Ukraine.

Volianska's work is a shining beacon of hope, resilience and beauty in a time of war and uncertainty. We are wishing her peace and harmony. #StandwithUkraine.
